

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved my family's time at home tremendously by us not having to constantly deal with unwanted and unsolicited phone calls.

We used to receive no less than 5-7 calls per week from unwanted and solicitors. Now, we hardly receive any at all. In fact, I cannot remember the last time I received one.

I believe in all of the freedoms we enjoy in America, including the right and freedom to have and do business. But it seems to me there are moral and ethical limits on that that should be adhered to. Those rights and freedoms become harassments when it is forced into my home, whether by telephone or otherwise.
